

UPDATE ON ALEX

Alex's cancer is currently in remission, his bloodwork is all good. Since March he has been on maintenance with permission to return home to Chiapas but with consultations every month in Mexico City. That means he must travel once a month and pay for a hotel room and food expenses.

He must maintain hospital rest, a diet without any rare food and eat a lot of vegetables. He is on oral chemotherapy and as a side effect, Alex has hypersensitivity to natural and artificial light, hyperactivity and limps on his left leg.

The biggest expense they have is once a month when they need to travel back to Mexico City, although last month the hospital arranged for Alex and his mom to go to Mexico City for free in an airplane they still have to pay for food, hotel and cabs. And they have to apply every month to see if they can have the airplane tickets for free again.

Alex is taking online classes and he is a very happy boy, he is a fast learner but gets distracted very easily. He turned 4 two days ago!!

All his family is very happy and his mom is taking psychological therapy because she has PTSD but is doing well. She sells handmade bags to help themselves with daily expenses and his dad has a steady job.
